15:33:40 From Julie Smith to Everyone:

It would be helpful to have more information about what is exactly being looked for and who the panel is that is making the decisions. Are their funding guidelines or parameter? The grant application wasn't as complete in thsi way as others.

15:41:16 From Britnie Powell to Everyone:

There are a couple of resources I utilize to connect with non-profits that my students can get involved in.

Youthlinc sponsors a Local Service Directory: Youthlinc Account

(samaritan.com)

You have to create an account for it but then once someone creates an account, click the black bar with the magnifying glass and "Local Service Directory" to find volunteer opportunities. From there, you can view results by map to see what's near you (in the top right corner) or you can search by category, age, or location on the left side of the page.

This organization is working on making adjustments so that students who aren't participating in Youthlinc could log their hours on the site as well.

Students can earn the President's Volunteer Service Award by completing a minimum of 100 hours of verified service.

Another bank I've used but am less familiar with is <https://www.justserve.org/> They have available projects to get involved with and a list of organizations.

Here's a link to our report:

15:57:41 From Elaine Grant to Everyone:

I love the report - it is thorough and enlightening. I am hearing from teachers at my school that they are very concerned about discussing controversial topics in class. They have had problems already this year with topics that have come up in class. They are worried about repercussions from these discussions. Perhaps USBE could provide some kind of training in conducting these discussions for teachers who may be concerned about this.

15:59:26 From JoAnna Sorensen USBE to Everyone:

@Elaine, thank you for saying this. We have things in the works. We can't ask teachers to lean in if we aren't doing it ourselves, right? I think there are two things needed, if I'm hearing teachers correctly - how to handle it in the classroom, and how to speak with parents and admin about teaching it.

15:59:48 From Eleesha Tucker to Everyone:

Who wrote this message on the first question? I'm working on a similar project and would love to connect with you. (Specifically creating a course for parents about religion and the Constitution in public schools).

We have started working on a draft policy titled "Recognizing Constitutional Freedoms in the Public Schools and training for teachers. This includes civic and character education and we are getting many teachers giving feedback of appreciation for the support in facing the issues. Not perfect at it yet, but it feels good to be trying to address it.

15:59:50 From Elaine Grant to Everyone:

We do have district guidelines about dealing with controversial topics, but our teachers are not confident in their discussions being understood in context. I gave them the current district guidelines, but there is still concern...

16:01:33 From Alden Jack to Everyone:

Hi Eleesha! This is Alden from Cache. We are working on the "recognizing constitutional freedoms" policy. I would love to chat further . . .

16:01:33 From JoAnna Sorensen USBE to Everyone:

I think training in teaching civil discourse is important, too, which Eleesha can help with.
